

Getting through winter – you can still get vaccinated

More than one million citizens have already accepted the offer of vaccination this autumn.

The Danish Health Authority recommends that you accept the offer of vaccination so that you are protected against severe illness in the best possible way. You have therefore previously received an invitation to the autumn vaccinations, and you can still get vaccinated.

If you have already booked an appointment, or if you do not wish to accept the offer of vaccination, you can disregard this letter. You will not receive any more reminders.

Where can I be vaccinated?

Where you can be vaccinated depends on where in Denmark you live. You can also be vaccinated at some general practitioners and at some pharmacies. Locally, there may also be other options. Some vaccination sites require an appointment, and at other places you can show up without an appointment.

If you have any questions, your Region can help you. They can also help you book an appointment for vaccination where it suits you best. We recommend that you book the first available appointment that suits you. You can find the direct number in the box on the right:

If you cannot get to the vaccination site on your own or with the help of a relative due to a permanent physical or mental functional impairment, you can contact your municipality to hear whether you can get help with transport to a vaccination site or whether you can be vaccinated in your own home.

Do you have any questions?

You can get answers to questions about vaccination in the original invitation letter, or you can contact your own doctor.

Processing of your data

In connection with the vaccination offer, Statens Serum Institut processes personal data about you. You can read more about how your data are processed in the original invitation letter.
